Transport of species and chemicals in microfluidic systems is a topic of much current interest. This article addresses the generation of hydrodynamic patterns in microchannels induced by non-parallel flows. The focus is on the generation of coherent patterns that can be used to carry cargo in microfluidic systems. This is achieved by exploiting the fact that hydrodynamic instabilities generate fluid patterns that are the result of complex interactions between flow and surfaces in microchannels. These patterns are typically limited to regions of the channel that are close to one wall. These fluid patterns can be generated at low flow rates, even in the presence of substantial amounts of dispersed phase, but they are particularly evident in the presence of particles that are suspended within the continuous phase. Experimental results are presented that demonstrate the generation of hydrodynamic patterns in a microchannel as a result of a non-parallel flow. A model is also developed that predicts the outcome of non-parallel flow on the formation of fluid patterns within a channel. John Paul Hay (October 3, 1935 – December 21, 2011) was a Canadian politician. He was a member of the House of Commons of Canada from 1988 to 1993. Born in Vancouver, British Columbia, Hay served in the Canadian Army from 1954 to 1959. He was first elected to the House of Commons in the 1988 federal election as the Progressive Conservative member for Vancouver Kingsway. Hay served in the 35th Canadian Parliament and was re-elected in the 40th Canadian Parliament. Hay was a former special assistant to Member of Parliament Jack Austin when Austin was Minister of National Defence. Following the end of his parliamentary term, Hay served in various positions with the Canadian defence industry. In 2002, he was the first president of the Canadian Association of Defence and Security Industries (CADSI).
